Course Objectives

This course presents an overview of the dynamics of workplace conflict and the use of Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) practices in addressing such conflict in the workplace. It has been estimated that as much as 25 percent of a manager's time is devoted to activities related to interpersonal conflict. This conflict arises from the application of, and compliance with, statutory employee-management issues such as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Pregnancy Disability Act, and the Americans with Disabilities Act. Litigating these conflicts is costly and time consuming for employers and employees alike. In addition, dealing effectively with conflict among workers and between employees and non-employees gains importance as incidents of workplace violence have escalated over the past several years.

Students will be introduced to a variety of ADR procedures including arbitration, mediation, interventions, mini-trials, neutral fact-finding, panel review, and other alternatives to litigation-based conflict resolution. Trends in the use of ADR procedures in private, public and non-profit organizations will be reviewed as well as discussion of legal and ethical considerations in the use of ADR.

Students successfully completing this course will have a broad understanding of the history of ADR as it has evolved in the American workplace, the political and cultural implications impacting employers, employees, taxpayers and the public at large. In addition, students will learn the benefits and limitations of using ADR to address both interpersonal and intrapersonal conflict in the workplace. Students will also gain experience in selected ADR methods through role-playing exercises and case study examinations.

Course Requirements

Text for the course is RESOLVING CONFLICTS AT WORK (Revised Edition): Eight Strategies for Everyone on the Job by Kenneth Cloke and Joan Goldsmith (Jossey-Bass Publishers, 2000, ISBN 13-978-0-7879-8024-5 or ISBN 10-0-7879-8024-2).

Readings for the course include a compendium of articles from professional journals and other materials selected from organizations such as the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the American Arbitration Association, or from other sources listed on the UNT web site or the Internet via search for ADR and ADR-related topics. In addition, students will select, read and report on at least one book from a list of authorized books dealing with workplace conflict and/or resolution.

Lectures during the course presented by the instructor and/or selected guest speakers will provide theoretical and practical information regarding the use of ADR methods. Students are expected to interact with both the instructor and guest presenters regarding experiences with ADR methodologies being discussed.

Case studies and role-playing will be important to students in evaluating applicable methodology for ADR use in addressing conflict in the workplace. Assignments of case studies and role-playing will be as homework or in-class.

Grading Procedure

Grades will be determined according to the following weights:

Attendance, preparation and class interaction	20%
Final exam	40%
Book analysis and perspective	40%
Total	100%

Classroom Expectations

By its very nature, this class provides significant opportunity for students to engage one another in class discussion and/or role-playing exercises. Students are expected to follow the discussion topics and/or role descriptions furnished with assignments and to maintain decorum and respect in all class sessions, as well as to further the educational experiences of all concerned.

A few common courtesies will make our class time more pleasant:

- No beepers or cellular phone interruptions
- No sleeping
- No talking while others have the floor
- No reading or writing pertaining to other endeavors or courses

ADA Accommodation

If you require accommodation for a special need, you must notify the instructor prior to the second weekend class meeting. If you have questions about an accommodation, please see the ADA advisor for the Institute of Applied Economics.
