

Criminal Justice – Career Resources

What can I do with a Masters degree in Criminal Justice?

Criminal justice careers can encompass a variety of jobs and typically welcome people with backgrounds in criminal justice, criminology, sociology, political science, psychology, social work, and other liberal arts and human services disciplines. The employment possibilities within the traditional police, courts, and corrections areas are being expanded with opportunities in private business.

Bureau of Labor Statistics Information

Probation Officers and Correctional Treatment Specialists (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos265.htm>)

- State and local governments employ most workers.
- A bachelor's degree in social work, criminal justice, or a related field usually is required.
- Employment growth, which is projected to be about as fast as average, depends on government funding.

Private Detectives and Investigators (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos157.htm>)

- Work hours often are irregular, and the work can be dangerous.
- About a third were self-employed.
- Applicants typically have related experience in areas such as law enforcement, insurance, the military, or government investigative or intelligence jobs.
- Keen competition is expected because of the large number of qualified people who are attracted to this occupation; opportunities will be best for entry-level jobs with detective agencies or as store detectives on a part-time basis.

Paralegals and Legal Assistants (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos114.htm>)

- While some paralegals train on the job, employers increasingly prefer graduates of postsecondary paralegal education programs; college graduates who have taken some paralegal courses are especially in demand in some markets.
- Paralegals are projected to grow faster than average, as law offices try to reduce costs by assigning them tasks formerly carried out by lawyers.
- Paralegals are employed by law firms, corporate legal departments, and various government offices and they may specialize in many different areas of the law.

Lawyers (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos053.htm>)

- Formal educational requirements for lawyers include a 4-year college degree, 3 years in law school, and the passing of a written bar examination. Competition for admission to most law schools is intense. Demand for lawyers will be spurred by the growth of legal action in such areas as health care, intellectual property, international law, elder law, environmental law, and sexual harassment.

State and Local Government, Excluding Education and Hospitals (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/cg/cgs042.htm>)

- Local government employs more than three times as many service workers than does State government; most are firefighters and law enforcement workers.
- The attacks of September 11, 2001, will increase demand for police, firefighters, and other emergency personnel; however, budgetary constraints may force spending cuts in other areas, slowing overall employment growth.
- Employer-provided benefits are more common among State and local government employees than among workers in the private sector.

Police and Detectives (<http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos160.htm>)

- Police work can be dangerous and stressful.
- Civil service regulations govern the appointment of police and detectives.
- Competition should remain keen for higher paying jobs with State and Federal agencies and police departments in affluent areas; opportunities will be better in local and special police departments that offer relatively low salaries or in urban communities where the crime rate is relatively high.
- Applicants with college training in police science or military police experience should have the best opportunities.
