

Acknowledgments

A number of people should be acknowledged for their help and participation in the GILS Evaluation project. The Contracting Officer's Technical Representative (COTR) was Peter Weiss at the Office of Management and Budget. The Co-COTR was Lisa Weber at the National Archives and Records Administration. Individuals that served on the project Advisory Group were Chuck Arnason (Department of Defense), Eliot Christian (U.S. Geological Survey), T. C. Evans (Government Printing Office), Steve Hufford (Environmental Protection Agency), Vicki Ries (Government Printing Office), Lisa Weber, Peter Weiss, and Roxanne Williams (Department of Agriculture). In addition to providing general suggestions regarding the development of the project, they also reviewed and commented on drafts of the final report.

A number of individuals assisted members of the study team in the data collection activities. We especially wish to acknowledge the assistance of those who helped schedule the site visits: Steve Hufford at the Environmental Protection Agency, Vicki Ries and T. C. Evans at the Government Printing Office, Kurt Molholm at the Defense Technical Information Center, and Gladys Myatt and Helen Whatley at the Department of Treasury.

Many other individuals and groups also participated in the study. First there are those who assisted the study team by arranging focus group sessions, interviews, and other data collection activities. In addition, a large number of people participated directly in the study through site visits, interviews, focus groups, completing surveys, and providing other information to the study team. Finally, a number of students assisted in the project by participating in the online user assessment. There simply are too many participants to name individually, but the study team greatly appreciates their contributions.

In addition, a number of individuals were kind enough to review drafts of the final report and provide the principal investigators with suggestions and comments. Again, we greatly appreciate your time and effort.

A nod of thanks goes to other members of the GILS Evaluation study team. J. Timothy Sprehe (Sprehe Information Management Associates), John Carlo Bertot (University of Maryland Baltimore County), Jeff Rubin and Steven K. Wyman (Syracuse University), and June Koelker and Erin Stewart (University of North Texas) all provided a range of assistance with project development, data collection and analysis, report writing, and other aspects of the study. Special thanks goes to Erin Stewart for her tireless work and dedication to this project. Without all their help this project could not have been completed successfully.

The Coalition for Networked Information provided the listserv used by the project Advisory Group throughout the project, and thanks go to Craig Summerhill for his assistance.

We also appreciate the assistance of various staff at the University of North Texas, including the support of Academic Computing Services and the Office of Sponsored Programs. We especially acknowledge the help provided by office and administrative staff in the School of Library and Information Sciences: Paula King, LeAnne Coffey, Greg Straughn, Sharon Willis, and David Zych. And a special thanks to Ginger Boone for computer support, and Kim Kilman and Gloria Shobowale, master's students at the School for their efforts in copyediting, HTML markup, and other project support.

Despite the range of assistance and involvement from others, however, the content of the final report is the responsibility of the principal investigators.
